CHICAGO'S VERY OWN

SLOW & LOW

Lowrider fans cruise to East Pilsen for festival

Chicago Tribune

Hundreds of lowriders cruised into East Pilsen on Sunday for a festival showcasing the culture of souping up old cars and driving them “slow and low.”

The festival, in its fourth year and hosted by the Chicago Urban Art Society, aims to promote the craftsmanship and artistry of lowriding, which emerged more than 50 years ago out of Mexican-American communities in the Southwest.

Staged along South Lumber Street, the festival draws car enthusiasts from across Chicago and the Midwest, organizer Peter Kepha said.

“Although they don’t consider themselves traditional artists, how could you look at these cars and not see that they’re pieces of art?” Kepha said.

The elaborate paint jobs, meticulously maintained accessories and chrome embellishments can take years and thousands of dollars to get just right, said Juan Silva, 35, a tattoo artist who has a shop in Crystal Lake and is a member of the Viejitos Car Club.

Achieving that look requires determined hunting at swap meets and on Craigslist and eBay for vintage parts that can run in the hundreds of dollars.

“Sometimes you can find them brand new, still in the box,” said Jose Martinez, 38, a warehouse manager from the South Side who is also a member of the Viejitos club.

But it’s the hydraulic suspensions that allow the cars to sit low to the ground that most define them and the “slow and low” culture.

“We’re not trying to get anywhere fast, we’re just enjoying the ride,” said Sergio Trevino, 32, a mechanical assembler from the South Side.

The social aspect of the lowriding culture is what’s most rewarding, Silva said.

“It’s about camaraderie,” he said. Car clubs like Viejitos offer an opportunity for enthusiasts to share tips and help one another locate parts. The clubs also get together for rides.

“The true joy is driving them, and driving them far,” Silva said.

Kepha said he and his sister Lauren Pacheco organized the festival in an effort to expose more Chicagoans to the lowriding culture.

Third-generation Mexican-Americans who were born and raised in Brighton Park, Kepha and Pacheco run the Chicago Urban Art Society, a nonprofit exhibition space on the corner of South Jefferson and West Cermak.

“We want to tap into our clientele and get them into this,” Kepha said.

Remembering how to listen—and let go

Oddly, though you're surrounded by hundreds of thousands of people at Lollapalooza who are screaming, throwing mud at each other, slamming back $25 wine waterbottles and, sometimes, listening to music, it's incredibly easy to feel alone.

Or at least I felt that way when I squirmed my way to the front of the Lake Shore stage on the final day of the fest. I was there to see Glen Hansard, singer of The Frames and The Swell Season who's now out on his own as a solo artist, and I was alone because, well, he's not exactly the trendiest dude. The rest of my friends were at Betty Who or something a little more of-the-moment.

Also working against me was the fact that the sky had been puking rain in intermittent bursts all afternoon, and this idiot had left her umbrella at home. Sure enough, a few songs into Glen's set—he's looking significantly grayer around the jowls these days, by the way—huge, fat, chilly drops started plopping down, soaking the open field.

The umbrellas went shooting up, the VIPs dove for cover and the rabbling and grouching began. Plenty of artists would keep playing, pretending not to notice that they were losing the crowd. Others still would issue some kind of "WOOO CHICAGO" rallying cry.

But here's where this story diverges from the norm. Glen didn't do any of that. Instead, he reminded us how much time we spend controlling our surroundings, avoiding just such a scenario, staying indoors and plugged in. This was a time, he said, to lift our arms and faces to the sky and just live.

It seemed wrong not to comply with a man so obviously passionate for his craft and his crowd. How many shows had I seen that weekend where tons of people—myself included—had their faces smashed into their smartphones or were gabbing with their friends about something entirely unrelated?

So I let myself connect with the moment, left my buzzing phone in my bag and belted every word I knew, totally out of tune with the soggy Irishman, who chided those whose umbrellas were still up and who were poking at their gadgets, and rallied the crowd to drown out the thumping EDM at Perry's stage.

Maybe there was magic in those raindrops, but we followed his every command. And by the time we were roaring the chorus to "The Auld Triangle," which Glen had taught us minutes earlier, the crowd had become just that—a "we." Sure, the SUPER excited guy in front of me was still a stranger, as was the sopping couple next to me, but now we were on the same team. All because we stopped for a minute and really listened.

TURNING POINT?

West Garfield Park has Chicago's highest homicide rate, lowest life expectancy

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

On a recent Friday night, Gary Thomas threw an outdoor party at a hotspot in his West Side neighborhood.

There were no crowds or Solo cups or blaring stereos, though, on the corner of Kostner and Maypole avenues. And when a police officer arrived to say hello, partygoers welcomed her.

In a few hours, the scene on that sidewalk will be very different: The sounds of laughing neighbors gathered around a grill will be replaced by the whispers of drug dealers and their customers.

"By the end of tonight, they'll be back here," Thomas, 25, said about drug dealers on the block, where police made arrests in three separate incidents of heroin possession this year through July, according to online police data.

Police say they are cracking down on drug sales that drive the violence in West Garfield Park, which has the highest homicide rate of Chicago's 77 community areas.

This is not news to the community, still reeling from the death of 11-year-old Shamiya Adams, who became yet another symbol of the city's seemingly uncontrollable gun violence when she was shot to death at a sleepover last month in the 3900 block of West Gladys Avenue. Tevin Lee, 19, has been charged in her death in what prosecutors say is a case of gang retaliation.

Also recently, a study released by the city found West Garfield Park has the lowest life expectancy of Chicago community areas but offered few reasons for the ranking.

Because of these challenges, some West Garfield Parkers have left, but others, like Thomas, have taken small steps to reclaim their neighborhood—even their sidewalk, if only for a few hours.

What residents say they appreciate about living in West Garfield Park may have contributed to its problems: its proximity to the Eisenhower Expressway and to Garfield Park. The Eisenhower is an easy way for people who do not live in the area to get to West Garfield Park to buy drugs, police say.

Last year, Chicago police implemented the West Side Narcotics Initiative, which targets smaller scale busts, Chicago police spokesman Martin Maloney said. After narcotics officers make a bust, patrol officers maintain a presence in the area so another drug market doesn't quickly reappear.

As part of the program, police reassigned 30 officers to narcotics and 30 more to patrol, Maloney said.

West Garfield Park, which has loose borders of the CTA's Green Line to the north, Taylor Street to the south, Kenton Avenue to the west and Garfield Park to the east, has had the highest homicide rate of Chicago's 77 community areas over the past five years, according to a RedEye analysis of Chicago police data.

From 2009 through July, West Garfield Park logged 88 homicides among its population of about 18,000 residents, according to RedEye data.

It's not the only West Side community overwhelmed by crime. Austin has logged more homicides than West Garfield Park—187 homicides from 2009 through July, RedEye determined. But Austin has about five times as many people as West Garfield Park. On average per year, Austin has seen a rate of about 34 homicides per 100,000 residents.

Still, West Garfield Park's homicide rate is higher. If it had a similarly sized population, it would average about 87 homicides per 100,000 residents annually.

Compared with Austin, West Garfield Park also lost a larger percentage of its population, about 21 percent, between 2000 and 2010, according to 2010 Census numbers.

For those who remain, there may be some comfort in knowing that violence in West Garfield Park is not widespread, according to research by Yale professor Andrew Papachristos.

Homicides are limited to a "small world of connected individuals," Papachristos determined after studying killings from 2005 to 2010. Papachristos pegs the West Side 11th Police District network at 1,500 people, many who engage in criminal activity and know each other.

"The risk of stepping on a landmine in Afghanistan is less than 10 out of a 1,000, which means it's safer to walk around a real war zone than it is for the young men in this network to walk around West Garfield Park," Papachristos wrote.

For residents in West Garfield Park who are not in this network, the risk is "far better, though still not as safe as residents of, say, Jefferson Park or Edgewater."

For Fatima Allah, though, Shamiya's death was another excuse to keep her 4-year-old son Quenell inside.

Shamiya went to the same school as Quenell, Melody Elementary School in West Garfield Park, Allah said. Already at age 4, Quenell has picked up on the violent undertones in his neighborhood. In his church camp, he has learned to chant, "Boom, boom, stop the violence."

As the two walked their 13-year-old German shepherd Rambo near the Green Line tracks Wednesday morning, Allah, 33, told RedEye she doesn't feel safe outside her home.

"They shooting, and the police haven't solved the [case or found the] people who are shooting or anything so they still out here with guns," said Allah, who said she has spent time in West Garfield Park nearly all her life. "And who knows, they might come shoot right now."

The only reason she stays in the community, she said, is her grandmother, a longtime West Garfield Park resident. And though she is afraid of the activity in her area, Allah said she likes her neighbors and calls West Garfield Park "a nice neighborhood."

In it all, at least one elected leader has found a ray of hope in Shamiya's death.

"I think it's definitely a turning point for West Garfield Park," said Ald. Jason Ervin (28th), whose ward includes East and West Garfield Park. "I saw people come together that I haven't seen come together for years. We don't want her death to be in vain."

The recent killings weren't figured into a newly released city health department study on life expectancy in the city, which examined data from 1990 to 2010. For residents in West Garfield Park, it's 68.8 years, while residents across Chicago live, on average, to be almost 78, the study showed.

Brian Richardson, a city health department spokesman, said the department wasn't sure why West Garfield Park has the lowest life expectancy.

Richardson said the conclusions of the report will be used to determine needs for neighborhood programs.

Whitney Brown, 43, said she appreciates programs that give her 7-year-old son a place to be after school. Brown said she moved to West Garfield Park six years ago from North Lawndale, a decision she doesn't regret because she is near schools and grocery stores.

She said she has heard about violence in the neighborhood, but hasn't been affected by it.

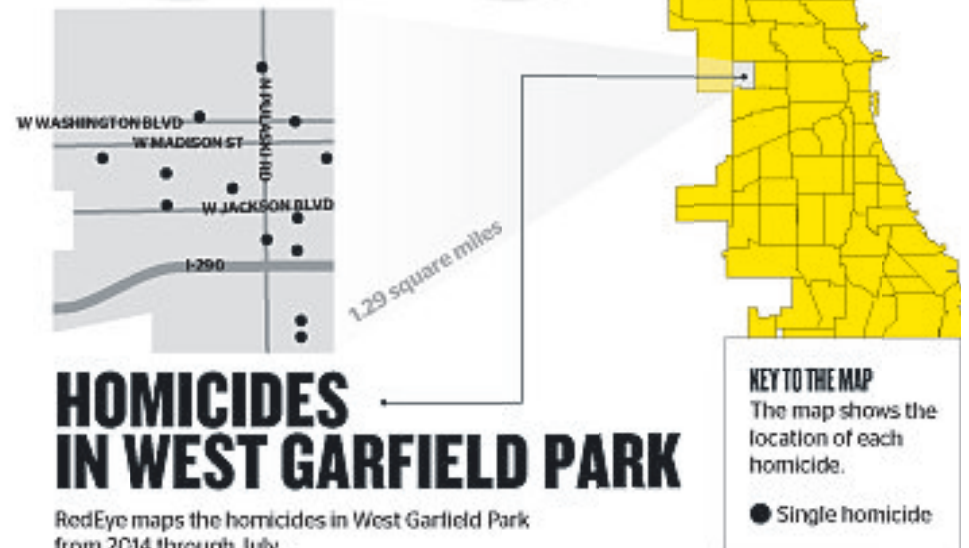

When asked to describe West Garfield Park, she said, "Quiet, respectable neighbors."

Blue Line closures are coming

Damen, California stops to close starting Sept. 4

By Tracy Swartz | REDEYE

Some Blue Line riders may have to change their commute temporarily after Labor Day. The Damen and California Blue Line stops both will close for several weeks at different times in the fall for renovations, the CTA will announce Monday.

The California stop in Palmer Square will close from Sept. 4 until Oct. 16 while the Damen stop in Bucktown will close from Oct. 20 until Dec. 22. The agency said it will add more rush hour and late night service of the No. 56-Milwaukee bus route, which travels between Jefferson Park and the Loop and runs parallel to the Blue Line.

Both the California and Damen stops will undergo stationhouse and platform upgrades and repairs that include improved lighting and signage and more turnstiles and bike racks as part of the CTA's four-year, $492 million Blue Line overhaul.

The two stations, which currently are not accessible for riders with disabilities, will not become accessible as part of this program.

The $33 million station renovation also includes improvements to the Western stop in Logan Square, which saw an overhaul in 2001 and will remain open during construction. The Damen and California stops were built in the late 1800s. All three stations will receive new artwork.

The CTA said it also will announce temporary street and alley closures and parking restrictions closer to the project start date. This summer, the CTA has been closing parts of the Blue Line on the North Side on weekends to upgrade track. Shuttle buses have replaced trains as part of the track work, which the agency expects to complete in September.

The Damen stop recorded nearly 2.2 million rides last year, a 4 percent bump from 2012, according to CTA data. The California stop logged nearly 1.6 million rides last year, an increase of about 4 percent versus 2012.

The Milwaukee bus saw nearly 3.2 million rides last year, a decrease of about 6 percent compared with 2012.

As of June 15, southbound No. 56 buses operate every day from about 4:30 a.m. until 10:30 p.m., while northbound buses operate every day from about 5:30 a.m. and 11:30 p.m.

The No. 56 route used to operate for more hours but saw cuts in the 2010 CTA bus service reductions.

Lollapalooza drone flights draw scrutiny, but no penalty

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

A Chicago man who sent a camera-equipped drone over Grant Park during Lollapalooza got a talking to from the Federal Aviation Administration but is not in any formal trouble over the matter.

The FAA reviewed two videos showing aerial shots of the three-day festival in Grant Park captured by the drone and posted to YouTube on Monday by user Alfredo Roman.

One video appeared to be footage from Saturday just before dusk, and the other is daytime footage captured the Friday and Sunday of the fest, according to the video's description.

Elizabeth Cory, an FAA spokeswoman based in the Chicago area, said in an emailed statement Friday: "The matter has been closed with an educational conversation with the individual who operated" the drone.

Roman could not immediately be reached for comment Friday.

Iraqi official accuses Islamic State of atrocity

5 Islamic State militants have killed hundreds of Iraq's minority Yazidis, burying some alive and taking women as slaves, an Iraqi government minister said Sunday, as U.S. warplanes again bombed the insurgents and a political deadlock dragged on.

Human rights minister Mohammed Shia al-Sudani accused the Sunni Muslim insurgents—who have ordered the community they regard as “devil worshippers” to convert to Islam or die—of celebrating what he called “a vicious atrocity.”

No independent confirmation was available of the killings of hundreds of Yazidis, an event that could increase pressure on Western powers to do more to help tens of thousands of people, including many from religious and ethnic minorities, who have fled the Islamic State's offensive.

The U.S. Central Command said drones and jet aircraft had hit Islamic State armed trucks and mortar positions near Arbil, the capital of the autonomous Kurdish region which had been relatively stable throughout the past decade of turmoil until the insurgents swept across northwestern Iraq this summer.

That marked a third successive day of U.S. airstrikes, and Central Command said in its statement that they were aimed at protecting Kurdish peshmerga forces as they face off against the militants near Arbil, the site of a U.S. consulate and a U.S.-Iraqi joint military operations center.

President Obama has urged Iraqi political leaders to bury their sectarian differences and form a more inclusive government that can unite Iraqis against Islamic State militants.

Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, seen as a sectarian leader, was in no mood for compromise, indicating in a tough speech delivered on television Sunday night that he would not drop his bid for a third term.

The Islamists' advance in the past week has forced tens of thousands to flee, threatened Arbil and provoked the first U.S. attacks since Washington withdrew troops from Iraq in late 2011, nearly nine years after invading to oust Saddam Hussein.

Israel, Palestinians agree to new truce

6 Israel and the Palestinians agreed Sunday to an Egyptian proposal for a new 72-hour cease-fire in Gaza starting at 2100 GMT, officials said. There were no immediate reports of breaches of the ceasefire although Hamas claimed it fired rockets as far as the Tel Aviv area for the first time since a previous truce expired on Friday, just minutes before the new truce took hold.

At least 39 killed in Iranian plane crash

7 At least 39 people were killed Sunday when an Iran-140 Sepahan Air passenger plane crashed after takeoff from Tehran's Mehrabad airport on a flight to Tabas in northeast Iran, state media reported. Initial reports said that all of the 48 passengers and crew had been killed, but state media later reported that some passengers had been injured and transferred to hospitals.

Japan order 1.6M to flee typhoon

8 Typhoon Halong killed one person in Japan on Sunday and injured 33, media said, as authorities ordered 1.6 million people out of the path of the storm that battered the west of the country with heavy rain and wind. Authorities issued the highest typhoon alert and landslide warnings as the storm dumped a 39 inches of rain in an hour.

Cease-fire talks collapse in Ukraine

9 Artillery shells slammed into the outskirts of the Ukrainian city of Donetsk on Sunday as government forces tightened the noose around the rebel-held redoubt and called on pro-Russian separatists to surrender. Talk of a cease-fire, a possibility raised by a separatist leader on Saturday, evaporated as Kiev government forces kept up an offensive to crush the rebels.

Sad day for racing

Driver dies after on-track incident involving NASCAR star

Tribune news services

Tony Stewart withdrew from the Cheez-It 355 NASCAR Sprint Cup Series race Sunday after being involved in a sprint car incident during an Empire Super Sprint race at Canandaigua Motorsports Park, a dirt track about a 90-minute drive from the road course at.

The Canandaigua incident resulted in the death of fellow driver Kevin Ward Jr.

"A tragic accident took place last night during a sprint car race in which Tony Stewart was participating," public relations representative Mike Arning said. "Tony was unhurt, but a fellow-competitor lost his life. Our thoughts and prayers go out to his family and friends."

Stewart issued this statement regarding the tragedy:

"There aren't words to describe the sadness

"There aren't words to describe the sadness I feel about the accident that took the life of Kevin Ward Jr. It's a very emotional time for all involved, and it is the reason I've decided not to participate in today's race at WGI. My thoughts and prayers are with his family, friends and everyone affected by this tragedy." —statement released by Tony Stewart

I feel about the accident that took the life of Kevin Ward Jr. It's a very emotional time for all involved, and it is the reason I've decided not to participate in today's race at WGI. My thoughts and prayers are with his family, friends and everyone affected by this tragedy."

A New York County sheriff's office said there was no evidence at this time that would cause it to file criminal charges against Stewart.

Ward and Stewart tangled, sending Ward's car into the retaining wall. Ward then climbed out of his car and walked toward cars still moving at a speed of about 40 mph around the racetrack. One car that reached Ward before Stewart was able to miss him, but even though Stewart swerved, Ward was hit by Stewart's right-rear tire and thrown about 30 feet. Ward was dead by the time his ambulance reached an area hospital.

Stewart originally planned to compete in Sunday's Sprint Cup Series race at Watkins Glen, but a little more than two hours before race time, Stewart-Haas Racing Vice President of Competition Greg Zipadelli announced that he had reconsidered.

All we know is life's unfair

A race car driver died too young Saturday.

Kevin Ward Jr. was killed on a sprint car track in New York after he was hit by a passing sprint car driven by NASCAR's Tony Stewart. Speculation and confusion surround the crash, and everyone wants answers.

Why was Stewart racing at all? Well, he often drove sprint cars on days he was off from NASCAR.

Why was Ward walking on the track? Most likely he wanted to confront Stewart. He wasn't the first driver to exit his car to show frustration toward a fellow competitor. In 2012, Stewart threw his helmet at Matt Kenseth's car as he left pit road.

But most incidents don't end in a fatality.

Should Stewart have competed in the NASCAR race Sunday at Watkins Glen? All we know is he opted not to race.

We all want to speculate; the need for closure is that strong. But conjecture won't change what happened.

Let's instead remember the victim. Kevin Ward Jr. was more than the man who was hit by a NASCAR driver, even if that is the unfortunate truth of how his name became a headline. He had a family, friends and dreams just like the rest of us. At 20 years old, his life was just beginning.

He had "racing in his blood," according to his website. He started racing go-karts at age 4. Ward was successful right away. In eight years of go-kart racing, he won six track championships and boasted 250 feature wins.

Ward continued his success in Micro Sprint races and later sprint cars. Ward's first sprint car feature victory came in 2011 in his second season in that series.

Maybe Ward's racing career would have ended soon. Maybe he would have put away his driving suit to attend college, find a full-time job or start a family. Maybe he would have risen through the ranks and raced in the Sprint Cup series, and fans would have known him as a part of the next generation of driving superstars.

We'll never know. Ward's life was taken before we could find out.

1	The Bears are 1-0 in the preseason. Good sign?	Sure, they're undefeated. But more importantly, it's football season!	Checks roster, notices Jay Cutler is still the starting QB, laughs to himself Hey, sorry, I'm back. Umm, no.	Yeah! The sign reads SUPER BOWL SUPER BEARS! No, I'm not overreacting at all.	"Yes!" say the 2008 Lions, who went 4-0 in the preseason and 0-16 when it counted.	It sure beats starting the preseason 0-1.
2	What is different about the Bears now that Martellus Bennett has returned?	All the media will swarm around Bennett for a day or so. Then things will go back to the way they were.	More players will find themselves landing on their necks at practice. Great for the spine!	Body slams and headlocks will be added to the playbook.	100 percent more Black Unicorn.	All his drills now end with him catching passes while diving off the top rope.
3	How good will Javy Baez be for the Cubs?	He's the Jose Abreu of the Cubs. We'll see after his first season.	Not as impressive as John Domanico will be for the Sox once he's called up from AAA. That arm, though.	HE'S LEADING THEM TO THE WORLD SERIES, BABY! Also not an overreaction.	Good enough to make watching a last-place team tolerable.	At least as good as the guy he replaced, though I can't remember who that was.
4	Why are Cubs games taking so long lately?	They're trying to convince their fans they have a chance. But actually, they're just dragging out the inevitable loss.	There is a team contest going on right now. Whoever has the longest at bat this season wins a new Chevy Aveo LTE!	Time between pitches is being kept using an hourglass? Get with the times, MLB.	Staying in last place requires real time and dedication.	Aw man, I haven't been watching. Why didn't you tell me there would be a quiz?
5	If Yasiel Puig can break his bat on a check swing, what else can he do?	Take two of three from The Rock in arm wrestling.	Tear the stitching off the ball just by making eye contact with it.	Break hearts. Like he did mine. I WISH I COULD QUIT YOU, YASIEL!	End world hunger with a bunt.	Glue it back together!

All or nothing, eh?

Chicago is about one week into Javy Baez watch. The bad news: He's struck out 12 times in 29 at-bats, including nine K's in his last 15 at-bats. The good news: He has a four-game hitting streak going.

THE MOUTHWATCH
“I could have handled the situation differently.”

—Bears tight end Martellus Bennett, on whether he believes he crossed a line when he slammed teammate Kyle Fuller to the ground last week, resulting in a fine and a suspension. Bennett rejoined the team Sunday.

THE DIGIT $52,000

That's how much a golf memorabilia collector paid for the ball Rory McIlroy used in the final round of his British Open victory last month. By the way, he followed that up by winning the PGA Championship on Sunday, beating Phil Mickelson by one stroke.

Griffin turns the tables

Robert Griffin III has moves to spare, but none as classy as the one he pulled off Saturday. The Washington Redskins quarterback asked two cancer survivors to sign his cleats, and asked another young fan to sign his practice jersey. Well played, RGIII.

What is 'wage theft'?

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Recent high-profile protests across Chicago have brought attention to low-wage workers' agitation for higher pay, and introduced a phrase that may not be familiar to the average Joe: "wage theft."

It's a dramatic term for something labor advocates say happens every day, but what exactly does it mean?

"Wage theft actually is a really, really pervasive issue," said Adam Kader, the Worker Center director at activist group Arise Chicago. "It's definitely one that's not quite a household name yet, but a few years ago, we were very deliberate about using the term 'wage theft' as opposed to 'non-payment of wages.'"

Among the most common are allegations that workers are paid less than minimum wage or paid unfairly for overtime work, instances of employers skimming a few cents off of each paycheck—and sometimes, particularly in nonunion jobs, workers are not paid at all, Kader said.

Adriana Alvarez, 22, said her bosses at McDonald's used to make her clock out before she counted up the cash register every night, meaning she wouldn't get paid for the 20 or 30 minutes per night it took to count the money. If the register was short, she used to have to pay the difference out of her own pocket.

While Alvarez did not file a formal legal complaint, she termed those practices wage theft, and she and her co-workers presented the management of their McDonald's with a petition asking them to stop.

"Basically wage theft means that they're taking away what little they're giving us," said

Alvarez, who makes $9.75 an hour.

A 2010 report from the University of Illinois at Chicago's Center for Urban Economic Development found that 26 percent of low-wage, front-line workers in the Chicago area reported being paid less than minimum wage in the week before being surveyed. Of those who had worked more than 40 hours in the previous week, 67 percent said they had not been paid properly for overtime work. The report also found that people of color and immigrants were more likely to have been victims of wage theft.

McDonald's workers filed lawsuits in three states earlier this year, accusing employers of taking time off their time cards and failing to pay overtime, among other allegations.

"People know when they're being ripped off; they don't identify it, though, as this big-picture issue," Kader said. "When you talk to workers, they say 'Oh, it's because my boss didn't like me.' ... This is a routine thing at the industrial level. This is not a personal reason."

A spokeswoman for the National Restaurant Association disagreed, saying that most employers pay their workers fairly.

"We fully support compliance with all wage and hour laws, and if there were to be a case of divergence from the law, it is certainly not indicative of the industry as a whole," said Katie Laning Niebaum in an emailed statement.

Niebaum added that attempts to unionize restaurant workers in particular are "nothing more than labor groups' self-interested attempts to boost their dwindling membership by targeting restaurant employees."

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
Venus will be in your sign for several weeks, and for once, your love life should be running more smoothly. If you're single, you'll start to meet some nice people. If you're in a relationship, you and your honey will be getting along better.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
A moon opposition is reminding you about your partner's every flaw. But don't be too critical, and don't obsess about your honey's bad habits or negative traits. You're not perfect either. If something is bothering you, find a polite way to mention it.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
You're in a flirty mood, thanks to Venus. You'll chat up strangers wherever you go, making them fall instantly in love with you. You'll charm your on-again, off-again sweetheart with your big promises and grand ideas.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
You and your honey could be clashing over money matters or issues related to your home. The moon is reminding you that you often see things from entirely different viewpoints. Look for a way to meet in the middle.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you've been lonely lately, that's about to change. Social Venus is increasing your ability to make friends and connect with new people in a fun way. Collect some phone numbers and start building new friendships.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Mercury is moving into a friendly sign, and this fast-moving planet will increase your pace of communication. You'll be going to networking events or enjoying different social groups. Along the way, flirtation could be on the menu.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Venus will be opposite your sign for a few weeks, which means you should take it easy and not get too obsessed about finding that perfect relationship. If you're involved with someone, focus on healing and laughter and don't sweat the small stuff.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
You and your honey will be enjoying more quality time together as Mars helps to free up your schedules. You'll want to just talk, touch, connect and ignore the outside world for a bit. Have fun relaxing with your soulmate.

Aries March 21-April 19
Venus is making you more appreciative of that special sweetheart or longtime friend. You'll realize that this person has done a lot for you and that you have much to be thankful about in your relationship. Find a way to show that you care.

Taurus April 20-May 20
Don't assume you know everything that's going on. There's been a lot of gossip in your social life recently, and rumors are flying. But Jupiter is reminding you that your version of the truth might be very different.

Gemini May 21-June 21
You're feeling frustrated as the moon reminds you of all the things you don't have. If you're single, you're wondering why you can't instantly manifest a soulmate out of thin air. Unfortunately, finding true love doesn't work that way. Be patient.

Cancer June 22-July 22
You're getting busy with work, which could impact your social calendar. Chances are that you won't be able to flirt as much. But Mercury is reminding you that hard work eventually pays off.

Derulo's edgier style

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

» @TribLuis

Jason Derulo didn't try to dress like any of his famous idols while he was growing up in Miami. No, the "Whatcha Say" and "Talk Dirty" singer was too busy copying his older brother's style.

"I tried to dress like him," Derulo said Friday at the Harris Theater before performing during Macy's Glamorama. The annual fashion show benefited Ronald McDonald House Charities of Chicagoland and Northwest Indiana. "Big clothes, big white 'B, baggy jeans—that whole thing."

Did Derulo's mother approve of their baggy apparel?

"Not at all," Derulo said. "That was not her thing."

You're more likely to find Derulo these days in form-fitting clothes that show off his physique. The 24-year-old singer—who has been dating "American Idol" winner Jordin Sparks for nearly three years—has more of an edge to his style now. Derulo seems to prefer leather (he wore a black leather jacket Friday and was airing himself out while speaking to media), tank tops and dark colors.

That might explain why he's embarrassed by his wardrobe early on.

"I think through the whole first portion of my career, I would take back 80 percent of what I wore," Derulo said. "I was 19 years old. I was kind of feeling my way through everything. Whatever my stylist was pulling, I was wearing. As I look back, man, that was crazy. I was wearing some crazy, weird stuff. Like the 'In My Head' video. The styling in that video was just not me."

Derulo's fashion back then appeared more preppy and colorful than what he wears now.

"I feel like I was kind of going through the motions, but I was 19 years old, just coming in the industry and didn't know better. And I thought what they were putting on me was dope. But now I dress like myself."

Taking over someone else's work is OK, Ashton Kutcher (right), particularly when they are out of commission due to an undying quest for tiger blood and "goddesses." Copying someone else's work? Not so much. According to thr.com, the "Two and a Half Men" star may be in hot water after it came to light that several posts on A+, the Web-aggregate site he apparently co-founded in 2011, appear to have been plagiarized from articles previously published on sites such as BuzzFeed, Huffington Post and Cracked. The company's execs said they take "these allegations seriously and are looking into them." All content posted prior to July 2014 has been removed as "a precautionary measure."

Casting call

"Chicago P.D." is looking for more police. But you have to be a current or retired officer for real. The NBC series will conduct an open casting call for extras beginning at 10 a.m. Aug. 23 at FOP Hall, 1412 W. Washington Blvd. For more info, visit tailstickscasting.com.

T.O.H REALLY?

The precinct better brush up on its touchdown dancing skills. Former NFL wide receiver and vision of modesty Terrell Owens will appear in an episode of "Brooklyn Nine-Nine" this fall, Fox confirmed Friday. Playing himself, the controversial athlete and one-time reality star ("Boy, do I miss 'The T.O. Show,'" said no one ever) will face-off alongside the show's stars in a cops-vs.-firefighters football throwdown, ew.com says. Owens joins other slated Season 2 guest stars Kyra Sedgwick and Jenny Slate.
